The economy of the last decades has ignored and sabotaged the connection to the world for long stretches. Therefore, the economy needs a fresh start. At least that's what the World Economic Forum (WEF) postulates.

The question here is whether the consequences of the lockdown, the war and the energy crisis really force us to do a great reset? According to the WEF, a new beginning is needed for a more equitable, sustainable and resilient future.

We are witnessing a breakthrough of the next generation of businesses. The current crises are not triggering a reboot, but a changing of the guard. Those who had not heard the callings in recent years suddenly woke up. The niche models of the pre-COVID era and before the current smouldering crises are now maturing into true hopes for the future.

In times of upheaval, the winners in business will be those agile enough to respond effectively to emerging trends. As upheaval impacts the fundamental assumptions we have made about the world and business, a new generation of leaders is stepping up to the plate to find and exploit these new opportunities.

Award-winning production company TBD Media Group meets the leaders who see opportunities for positive change. In the 50 Leaders of Change campaign, TBD Media Group showcases the most innovative companies from every industry in the world and gives them a platform to share their vision for the future and their impressive journey into a new age. 50 Leaders of Change highlights the way global leaders are responding to and driving change.

Paolo Zanini, Founder and CEO of TBD Media Group, said:

"Change is now. History has shown us time and time again that it takes leadership to identify opportunities for positive change early and help shape the landscape for others. TBD Media Group is very proud to introduce the next generation of leaders, showcasing these future hopefuls in the 50 Leaders of Change campaign."

The 50 Leaders of Change documentary series offers valuable insights into how today's companies are taking action to shape the future of the planet.
