Nettec plc, the content managed corporate portal specialist, have developed a next generation knowledge transfer tool for a leading global insurance broker. Nettec have created from scratch a ground breaking browser based content editor which allows a refreshingly intuitive user centric approach to page design and development.

The Nettec user centric information management and knowledge dissemination tool is set to revolutionise the way that organizations share knowledge and has the capacity to increase operational effectiveness and improve the way that organizations communicate both internally and externally. Despite its rich functionality, the tool has been designed with the non-technical user in mind and is straightforward and easy for any person at any level in an organization to use. Nettec have now completed the second stage of the European Intranet project. This comprises of a federated bundle of around 35 micro sites spread across Europe and is available in English, French, Italian and German.

Technical Lead at Nettec Chris Pollard commented, “ We have been working intensively with cutting edge technology to develop a tool that guarantees an intuitive user friendly experience. Extensive data gathered from recent “User Acceptance Testing” has confirmed and supported our success in achieving this, and the feedback from the users has been overwhelmingly positive. To date this has been a very rewarding project for the Nettec development team and is a good example of how user –centric designed technology tools and solutions can have such a positive impact and transform the way that people work on a daily basis. This information management tool ensures that critical information and knowledge is easily transferred to the right people at the right time in the right way, strategically improving organisations competitive advantage.”
