IntroNet, a world leader in innovative HR solutions, today announced the appointment of Russell Dalglish to the position of Chief Executive.

In his previous position as Sales and Marketing Director at IntroNet Mr Dalglish was responsible for spearheading the company's global expansion. Since joining the company in 2001, he has delivered significant business in the challenging markets of Europe and Asia Pacific.

Commenting on the appointment, founder and principal shareholder Sean Giblin said Dalglish had demonstrated exceptional management and business development skills. "Russell will sharpen the focus on delivering outstanding results for our clients throughout the company and allow us to accelerate our growth strategy and support the increasingly global needs of our bluechip clients." Mr Giblin said.

This appointment has allowed IntroNet to implement a new senior management structure designed to accelerate the company's global expansion strategy.

Considering the next year in his new role Mr Dalglish said "Our customers face the challenge of delivering, nurturing and retaining talent against a background of increased demand and competition for the best people. The legislative, compliance and technology context is increasingly complex. It's a boardroom issue today because failure directly affects operational performance. Bringing our proven solutions to a wider audience over the next year is an exciting opportunity for us."
