A new green gadget that turns household waste into free fuel is one of the many recession beating and energy saving ideas from Eco Kitchens Online this winter.

The log maker, which is made from recycled plastic, can be used to transform burnable waste into free fuel for your log burner or open fire. Anything from newspapers, cardboard, and wood chippings, to dry leaves and tea bags can be used to keep your energy bills down and help you utilise up to 30% of household waste.

The log maker itself is very eco friendly, and it is made in the UK using recycled plastic pellets sourced from local authorities. It is quick and easy to use, and the raw materials it needs do not require soaking or drying.

It is also a versatile and practical gadget for gardeners who can use it to make free plant pots from old newspapers.

It is available at a specially reduced seasonal price of £22.95, along with many other bargain priced energy saving products at Eco Kitchens Online.

EKO has a wide range of energy saving devices that will help cut household bills as well as your carbon foot print. From energy monitoring gadgets such as the Efergy meter (reduced from £44.99 to £39.99) to a Battery Regenerator (reduced from £19.99 to 16.99) and the handy Thermoflow Magnetic Fuel Saver, which can be attached to a household boiler to cut energy usage and which is available at £55.00

The Director of Eco Kitchens Online Caroline Rigby says that EKO is dedicated to finding eco friendly products that can help the planet and can also aid recession-hit households facing rising fuel bills: "The recycled plastic log maker is just one of the many products that EKO has sourced that meet our stringent criteria for eco friendly products and provide practical ways of keeping household costs down."
