The news that Jennifer Aniston has apparently turned to acupuncture to increase her chances of getting pregnant is greeted with relief by acupuncturists in the UK.

“This will help women realise that acupuncture has an important role in fertility”, says Andrew Loosely, a leading practitioner of acupuncture. “Our latest figures at Healthwise have shown a success rate in fertility of 64.7% with our clients - which compares well with the success rate of IVF at around 25 – 35%. Even for those already going through an IVF or IUI programme we have increased their chances by 35% with the additional use of acupuncture”.

Fertility is increased with acupuncture http://www.healthwise-clinic.com/acupuncture\_fertility.php which stimulates the energy pathways in the body using very fine needles. At Andrew Loosely’s Healthwise clinics his patients are also advised on diet and lifestyle to suit their own situation, and often prescribed Chinese herbs in capsule form. Andrew’s patients appreciate the calm and sympathetic treatment they receive which helps to reduce fears and stress.

Acupuncture supports a woman’s natural ability to become pregnant, and is based on proven techniques thousands of years old. Andrew Loosely is an advocate of a non toxic lifestyle for better health. He is the author of “7 Secrets of Healthy Living” which explains Chinese traditional medicine and its relevance today. Andrew practises at the Healthwise Clinic in Burnham, Bucks and in Harley Street.
