For some families, Christmas will be a devastating time, due to archaic UK laws, failing judges and because inadequate court systems fail to uphold the basic human right of children being able to spend adequate time with both their natural parents.

Children's rights, as well as fathers rights (<http://fathersandchildrensrights.wordpress.com>) are a very important issue and organisations such as The Real Fathers For Justice are leading the way to try and make a difference for the sake of our children.

Despite numerous studies and surveys illustrating the benefits of a child having access to both parents, many men in the UK still have to battle through courts just to see their sons or daughters.

This poses a serious welfare issue for the children concerned.

Some men have fought for nine years or more, yet still their court orders are not upheld, allowing the mother to ruin the lives of these innocent children. This is a clear indication that something is wrong with the UK family court systems.

Can you imagine how degrading it must be to have to seek a court's permission just to see your own children?

There is an indication that things may be changing, an example is the recent speech by Jack Straw which is available at: <http://www.justice.gov.uk/news/newsrelease161208b.htm> but even so, there is a long way to go before fathers are treated as equal parents.

When we finally put our childrens rights (<http://fathersandchildrensrights.wordpress.com>) first, things should change for the better, but until then, thousands of passionate fathers will have to battle for our children to grow up in a fairer and more humane society.
