Archive One from C2C has been nominated as Messaging Product of the Year.

READING, UK, 3 February 2009: C2C, the leading provider of email data management solutions, today announced that it is a finalist in the 2009 Network Computing Awards with its award-winning email archiving software solution, Archive One, within the Messaging Product of the Year category.

Winners will be chosen via online voting available at the Network Computing Awards 2009 Awards website, <http://www.networkcomputingawards.co.uk> - open until March 5th. Last year more than 4,000 Network Computing magazine readers voted for their favourite products and companies. Network Computing Magazine is Britain's most established and long-running networking title. The final Award winners will be announced at a champagne reception in London on March 19th.

"This is the second consecutive year that Archive One has been nominated and we appreciate the recognition that reaching finalist status has generated." says Dave Hunt, CEO at C2C.

C2C's nominated Archive One solution helps organizations solve the headaches of email capacity management, enforce email retention policies and comply with various regulatory requirements regarding the use and retention of email, such as Sarbanes-Oxley, Freedom of Information Act, HIPAA, Gramm-Leach-Bliley, SEC and NASD Directives. Archive One technology is built on a proprietary advanced analytical search and policy enforcement engine, made up of nearly 50 analysis criteria used throughout the product line to centralize, automate and accelerate tasks which reduce risk associated with email and improve system usage.
