Notes for editors:

Based in 'The Heart of the Country Village' at Swinfen in Staffordshire, Allen Brown is an established 'thinking' jeweller.

His purpose as he moves his company into its 22nd year in 2009 is to focus on the ever 'greener' sourcing and use of both the gems and the gold he works with for his designs. His aim is to 'ethical without being ethnic'!

He completely endorses 'recycling' jewellery by remodelling a client's item into a new piece. Here he not only reuses the gems, but also the metal in which the gems were originally set. The unworn ring from your grandmother sitting at the bottom of your jewellery case will be remodelled into a piece that you never want to take off!

Clients come from all over the UK and have hugely different budgets. Many clients return again and again - Allen will own up to now making engagement rings or rings of commitment for the children of his first clients!

His ethics, aims and beliefs make his approach uncommon in the jewellery world.
