If you're stuck for a gift for Mothers Day, Season and Spice have the perfect present. A little box of fresh spices complete with recipe cards for a main course and dessert will bring warmth to any heart.

Season and Spice allows you to choose to send three, six or 12 deliveries, then every month they post out a little box of the freshest spices you've ever tasted, all measured out to make simple seasonal recipes. All the recipient has to do is buy the other ingredients and enjoy cooking up a treat for up to four people.

There is a vegetarian and non-vegetarian option, the boxes are small enough that they will fit through the letter box and boxes can be mailed across the UK and internationally as they are light enough for air mail. The spring season contains mouth-watering dishes such as Spice Crusted New Potato Salad and Tahitian Vanilla & Lavender Pannacotta.

The spices are sourced direct from their country of origin or from ethnic wholesalers in this country with their own suppliers. They grind and blend all the spices just before postage so they're fresh.

James Ransome, 33 from Bath, was inspired to set up Season and Spice when he created a wedding gift for some friends by selecting spices and recipes from places the happy couple had visited together. All their friends were so impressed with the idea that it inspired him to set up the company.

James started out running a market stall selling spices after training as a chef in top restaurants for Stephen Bull in London and Luke Mangan in Sydney before returning home to Bath. His passion has always been cooking and creating new and interesting dishes so Season and Spice was a logical progression.

Before Season and Spice James ran Sambava Spices supplying restaurants like Heston Blumenthal's, The Fat Duck in Bray with specially selected spices.

James said: "I visited Marrakech on holiday and was so intrigued and enthralled by the spice markets with their exotic colours and smells and realised it was a subject that represented all the things I loved the most. I have been running Season and Spice for 18 months now and I await every season with anticipation so I can get lost in the wonderful tastes that come with creating new recipes."
