Just a few weeks remain for cycling enthusiasts and Francophiles to prepare for the 2009 edition of Paris Bike Days.

Set to take place between Friday April 17th and Sunday April 19th, the event promotes people's passions for all things bike-based in the French capital.

Parc Floral de Paris, a site within easy reach of the wide array of Paris Hotels (http://www.laterooms.com/en/k12835253_paris-hotels.aspx), will play host to the celebration.

A number of pavilions will be set up to showcase the newest innovations in cycling, while a conference hall is to provide visitors with the chance to view, discuss and purchase a wide array of bike accessories.

Meanwhile, practice slopes give guests the opportunity to try out some of the latest models, while specially-constructed circuits are available for people keen to engage in something a little more sedate.

A number of demonstrations will also take place, providing spectators with the chance to see some of the cycles in action.

Guests can attend Paris Bike Days between 09:00 and 19:00 local time on each day of the showcase.

Tickets for the event cost €8 for adults and €5 for children, while youngsters under the age of three are able to enter for free. A number of concessions are also available.
