The multicultural spirit of the German capital is due to be celebrated in few weeks, as the 2009 edition of the Berlin Carnival of Cultures takes place in the city.

Also known as the Karneval der Kulturen, the event which takes place between May 29th and June 1st, involves a wide array of attractions, including music, dancing, food, drink and art in the Kreuzberg district of the municipality.

Carnival groups from around 70 different countries take part in a parade through the area, with most activities taking place around Blucherplatz and the procession itself normally running down Gneisenaustrasse.

However, this year, the pageant will head down Hermannplatz and a total of 98 groups have been confirmed. More than 350 stalls are due to be set up and will sell international products in the form of arts, crafts and gourmet cuisine.

"With the concept of a carnival which is focussed on the cultural richness of Berlin, also highlighting the often hidden treasures of its international cultural scene, the Carnival of Cultures was the concept that was a success from the start," the organisers explain.

Visitors intending to stay in the capital are advised to secure their hotel rooms as early as possible to avoid disappointment. LateRooms.com is offering up to 70% savings on Berlin hotels (http://www.laterooms.com/en/k12936832_berlin-hotels.aspx) ranging from luxury hotels to serviced apartments.

In particular five stars Grand Hotel Esplanade Berlin is offering double rooms for two adults from only 97 GBP on LateRooms.com, the normal price is 260 GBP. This hotel is situated in the heart of Berlin downtown cultural district and has an excellent customer rating of 89%.

Alternatively Ramada Hotel Berlin is offering double rooms from 70 GBP for two adults. This hotel is also situated in the center of Berlin and has four stars rating.
