BitDefender® announced today that BitDefender Total Security 2010 is available for beta testing. Users who wish to test the new software can subscribe at <http://beta.bitdefender.com>

The company is offering prizes to the most thorough beta testers, including an Asus Eee PC to the most active beta tester on <http://beta.bitdefender.com>. Other prizes include a Nintendo Wii, an Apple iPod Touch and free licenses for BitDefender Total Security 2010.

BitDefender Total Security 2010 beta offers enhanced features, including:

Behavioural Scanner Technology: The software uses a new heuristic detection technology implemented in BitDefender antivirus software.

Enhanced Performance: New architecture designed for better performance with a streamlined scan process and driver integration.

Improved User Interface: Improved user interface with a simplified look and feel that provides access only to critical security actions and the help area.

More Stringent Parental Control: Improved website filter, website categories and customisable profiles, a reporting system with e-mail alerts, application time control, and the ability to schedule a user's access to certain applications.

Carmen Maiercan, BitDefender's senior desktop product manager said: "We use beta testing as the last in a series of steps to ensure our customers receive the best possible protection against all types of malware and e-threats. We are counting on great interest from our user community for a successful beta test of Total Security 2010 and we are certain that the finished product will meet their most exacting demands."
