It's only two days since Mobile Fun announced their plan to give a free iPhone 4 case to anyone who was worried about the so-called "death grip" problem, and reports show that already the orders have been flooding in.

Just 48 hours have gone by, but requests have been coming in thick and fast and iPhone 4 cases (<http://www.mobilefun.co.uk/cat/iPhone-4-Cases.htm>) have been flying off the shelves as people take advantage of this limited time offer.

This proves that, despite Apple's assurances, there is a definite concern about the problem amongst iPhone users. The glitch, which shows your signal deteriorating when you hold the handset in a certain way, has proved very controversial for the company, who have been fielding questions from tech bloggers and consumers alike since the launch of the immensely popular iPhone 4.

To help set people's minds at rest and make sure they get the most out of this fantastic handset, Mobile Fun decided to offer free iPhone 4 cases (<http://www.mobilefun.co.uk/blog/information/free-iphone-4-case-for-death-grip-sufferers>) to anyone who was worried about the problem. As the cases are made from a non-conducting silicone-based gel, they act as an insulator between your hand and the phone which prevents the signal from dropping off.

To claim your free iPhone 4 case (<http://www.mobilefun.co.uk/blog/information/free-iphone-4-case-for-death-grip-sufferers>), normally worth £7.49, simply visit the Mobile Fun blog to find the promo code and follow the instructions there.

This offer will run until 30 July 2010 or until stocks run out.
