Leading water cooler service provider, Angel Springs, are pleased to announce the launch of their own Twitter feed.

This will now allow people to keep up with the latest information, updated on a regular basis, from the United Kingdom's longest established water cooler providers.

Things 'followers' can expect to see on the Angel Springs twitter feed include the latest business information, industry news, links to content published on the Angel Springs blog and the company's Youtube account, as well as all the other interesting benefits gained from keeping hydrated and drinking water on a regular basis.

John Murphy, Commercial Director for Angel Springs, commented "The launch of our twitter account underpins our commitment to making Angel accessible to our customers."

Since first being established in 1989, Angel Springs have maintained a high standard of quality and customer service, something the company prides itself on.

Already the largest water cooler service provider in the United Kingdom, Angel Springs continue to add thousands of customers per month.

Upholding a great image of professionalism, all members of customer service staff at Angel Springs are trained and qualified by the BWCA (British Water Cooler Association), meaning any customer queries are dealt with in the most efficient manner.

Maintaining a commitment to providing the best quality service for customers, Angel Springs offer a variety of price plans that allow customers much more flexibility than is often found.
