Vivitek's Qumi Q5 pocket projector is equally at home at business presentations as it is to share videos or photographs with friends. The size of an average paperback book QUMI Q5 packs a punch with a brightness of 500 lumens, WXGA resolution, and a contrast of 3500:1 delivering crisp pictures and rich colours.

Qumi can also display PowerPoint presentations, Word, Excel or Adobe PDF files straight from a USB flash drive – no laptop necessary. It also boasts a built-in Web-Browser, making it the first "Smart-Projector" by using the WiFi Qumi Dongle to connect to a WAP with Internet access. Its multitude of connectivity options, including HDMI, makes this pocket projector the ideal companion for tablets, laptops, and smartphones.

With an LED light source guaranteeing 30,000 hours of operation and just three seconds to power on (or off), the Qumi Q5 is projection-ready whenever needed – making it a truly mobile projector and it fits easily into a bag or backpack. The 490 gram featherweight is 3D-ready and uses DLP chip technology by Texas Instruments.

Qumi also works without a power cord when you connect to the detachable battery dock or battery pack (optional accessories) ensuring many hours of movie or gaming enjoyment for the user. Also and for style conscious consumer Qumi Q5 is available in five colours: glossy white and black and pink, blue and green.

"With Qumi Q5 users do not have to be concerned should there not be a projector on site at their business or domestic meeting – for they carry Qumi with them wherever they go", said Holger Graeff, General Manager EMEA, Vivitek Corporation.

"Should the user want to spontaneously watch a video from the internet or play an online game with friends Qumi Q5 is the tool to project either in a crisp picture that can go up to 2 meters diagonal projections. Indeed Q5 is the ideal companion for those who want all these options," concluded Holger Graeff.

Vivitek's Qumi Q5 HD pocket projector will be available from April:
