A christening is a special event for everyone involved, right? The parents, grandparents, friends, aunts, uncles, godparents... the lot. When you're deliberating over what Christening gift to plump for, on the one hand, you could go for something traditional like a prayer book or a bible, or you could go for something innovative, namely something from leading personalised gifts site

When you think of buying a Christening present, do you cringe at the thought of another money box, photo frame or silver rattle? Let's face it; while these gifts are quaint, they're not exactly imaginative or exciting.

There's really no excuse for picking such conventional, dull christening gifts any more. There are so many unusual and exciting pressies out there. Nowadays, more and more folks want to give something that shows they've really thought about their choice of Christening gift idea and prefer to give something that stands out from the crowd.

To find something that's well-designed, high quality, affordable and special sounds like a lot to ask, doesn't it? So where and how do you find these almost too-good-to-be-true-sounding christening gift ideas?

Well, here's the good news: you don't even have to set foot anywhere near a shop or spend hours battling your way through busy crowds. Who's got the time anyway? No, courtesy of the internet, it's a walk in the park.

GoneDigging has a babylicious array of personalised christening gifts, which you can get from the comfort of your sofa. These tend to be bespoke name-based gifts, and you can buy everything from Babies Astrological Charts to Personalised Teddy Bears – or even name a star after a wee one –

If you're a godparent, the traditional Christening gift is anything made of silver. Conventional christening presents include silver photo frames, jewellery like necklaces and bracelets. You can choose to have many of these products engraved with the child's name or initials, or even a special message:

Silver Name Bracelet, £49.99 –
