New card payment managed service provides a turnkey solution for retailers and merchants faced with replacing end of life PIN pads

Anderson Zaks (<http://andersonzaks.com>) has announced its new payment solution working with next generation PINpads that incorporate contactless payment facilities. The company has combined its PCI DSS compliant RedCard managed service with Ingenico's IPP 300 range of encrypted PINpad terminals to offer a service that is 'type approved' for all acquirers (banks). This fully integrated solution will enable merchants to quickly install a secure payment solution that is compliant with regulatory requirements, without formal accreditation. The new service is particularly suited to retailers and merchants that need to replace PIN pads which will become obsolete at the end 2012.

Ingenico's IPP 300 product range is designed for the retail market and offers the latest in PIN entry payment terminals. This combined with Anderson Zaks' RedCard comes at a time when many merchants are now faced with replacing their end of life existing devices. The terminals are both contactless payment and Point2Point Encryption ready (P2PE), enabling retailers and merchants to take advantage of these new technologies and future-proofing the solution.

Iain High, Managing Director at Anderson Zaks said: "This new integrated solution demonstrates Anderson Zaks' commitment as a delivery partner and will offer merchants more choice for payment solutions both in the UK and Irish payment market. This 'type approval' enhances our reputation for delivering a secure multi-channel payment service that is efficient, flexible, quick and easy for the merchant or retailer to deploy."
