One of the fastest growing health and social care recruitment agencies, Cardea (<http://www.cardearesourcing.com>), has opened its doors in the North West and is operating from an office in Manchester near the Airport.

Cardea recruits permanent and temporary social workers, nurses, health care professionals, care assistants and social housing employees.

The firm, part of established recruitment group Barker Ross, has strong contacts with local authorities and healthcare organisations throughout the North West and already has vacancies to fill.

Ross Buchanan, who is managing Cardea's operation in the North West, comments:

"At Cardea, we think that what really matters in health and social care is getting someone who knows what they are doing and building a relationship with that person. We offer staff that bit extra, so we have a loyal group of workers who can provide excellent service to clients."

Temporary workers who sign up with Cardea will be able to benefit from its commitment to training and rewarding staff, through Mercury, its unique loyalty programme. Ongoing training in their chosen field is offered as standard, plus a reward scheme, where they can save up to 15% on their shopping and Mercury Extra awards for outstanding performance.

Buchanan continues:

"Because we really invest in our staff, we can make sure hospitals, councils and private care homes can get the right staff from us on a regular basis, as people are interested in what we offer for their longer term success."

Cardea will be based at the Trident Business Park, a few miles from Manchester Airport.
