City & Guilds have just approved TradeSkills4U's MOD1 and MOD2 courses to be processed for accreditation.

TradeSkills4U are already recognised as an industry leader when it comes to electrical training. They are one of the first companies to introduce packages of courses making it easier for students to identify the courses they need and train to achieve their specific goals.

Many years ago TradeSkills4U introduced their MOD1 course. This practical workshop is a foundation electrical installation course which shows students how to install in a domestic setting. At the time there wasn't really anything else like it in the market place and TradeSkills4U were able to create a course that specifically met the demand for new entrants to the industry to learn how to carry out domestic installations.

TradeSkills4U recognised that this course although created in house should be represented by some kind of certification. As a result they applied to City & Guilds to see if the course could be accredited and have just heard it has been approved for accreditation. They are now going through the process of getting the full accreditation for the MOD1 and should finalise the details shortly meaning it will be accompanied by a City & Guilds certificate in the near future. This not only gives customers even more confidence in the quality of the training they will receive from Trade Skills 4U it also means their initial training will be recognised by City & Guilds.

Managing director Carl Bennett said:

"We have worked very hard to ensure our training is first class. We are very proud of our MOD1 course and are extremely happy it is going to receive the recognition it deserves. This further concretises our status as Britain's premiere electrical training provider and shows our commitment to go the extra mile for our students."

"We have already been given the go ahead from City & Guilds that these courses will be accredited, we are just waiting for the details to be finalised before we start handing out certificates."

Trade Skills 4U have also heard that their MOD2 course covering the Principles of Electro Technology will also be accredited. This means that every course in their Bronze and Silver course packages will now be accredited by City & Guilds.

Trade Skills 4U were established in 2005 as a training company covering a range of trades. However since then they have made the shift to focus purely on electrical and renewable energy skills. This has led them to developing state of the art facilities and industry leading courses.

Their commitment to first class training is evident in the training they deliver and the feedback they receive from their students as a result. In 2011 more people passed Trade Skills 4U's range of City & Guilds electrical courses than any other electrical training provider and even during these hard times the company continues to go from strength to strength.
