(United Kingdom – 31st July 2012) As the United Kingdom's top purveyor of home décor and innovative furnishing continues its A-Z of soft furnishings, Terrys Fabrics has published some great advice on how to decorate the home the green way. In today's ecological climate it has become all the more important to keep one's eye on the eco-friendly way of doing things, making the latest blog at Terrys Fabrics all the more useful.

As is explained in the latest instalment of what is becoming the country's most authoritative home décor blog, touches of green in British homes via plants and other such foliage is becoming ever more easy and popular.

Of course, consumers do not need to actually use the colour green in order to portray this theme in their living spaces. It also means being aware of the interior design methods used in the home and the effect or not, as the case may be, it has on the planet. Contemporary homes are really focused towards recycling and up-cycling, and using natural, sustainable materials when and wherever they can.

As well as employing green methods when decorating the home, Brits can do their bit to help to conserve the earth's precious resources. This can of course be done by turning down heating and using thermal curtains or window blinds to keep heat inside the home.

All fabrics are competitively priced at Terrys Fabrics as well, meaning that doing your bit for the environment whilst also saving money is made all the easier. To see the full range today, go to <http://www.terrysfabrics.co.uk> (<http://www.terrysfabrics.co.uk>).
