London, Great Britain, 30th October 2012:

radtac announced that they have been accepted onto the Framework Agreement to provide G-Cloud Services to government via Cloudstore. radtac has built an unrivalled and unique capability to deliver IT enabled business transformation and software products using all the latest modern methodologies and development practices, with specific expertise in those approaches derived from Agile, Kanban and Lean Thinking. This means that radtac services will continue to be available to the Public Sector.

“Government has made a commitment to project and programme management restructuring and we are delighted that our strengths as a provider of training, transformation and software development using agile and lean methods will be available to public sector buyers” said Richard Lindsay, Sales Director of radtac.

“Continued Public Sector recognition of our capability is important for radtac as a rapidly growing medium size business in challenging economic times.” said Peter Measey, CEO of radtac, he continued, “This further demonstrates that our approach and skills are needed in both the private and public sector and are in continued high demand. This further supports why we have expanded significantly to manage our growth in the last 4 months”
