A new competition from Cheapflights gives travel bloggers the chance to win a Kindle by writing about their experiences of foreign cultures.

It could be bull running in Spain, teaching English in Asia, sampling the food in Italy, or barbeques on the beach in Australia; this exciting opportunity gives bloggers and writers the chance to win a great prize by writing about their travel experiences.

The aim of this competition is to make people aware of being respectful of other cultures – and consider their impact on the local environment. Bloggers must write about their experiences of a foreign culture and upload the piece to their blog by 4pm Friday 7th December 2012 to be in with a chance of winning the brand new Kindle.

The Kindle Fire is faster than any previous version of the eBook. It has a full colour touch screen for your convenience, and comes with games, apps, video streaming capability, and cloud storage. It's the perfect prize for the savvy traveller, keeping you entertained on long journeys, without the need to carry around bulky books.

The 2012 ABTA travel trends report revealed that holidaymakers are increasingly concerned about their holiday benefiting the local culture. Getting immersed in the society which you are visiting reflects this trend, and the competition is the perfect way of enhancing your holiday experience for the better.

Entries must be between 300 and 1,000 words and contain a link back to the CheapFlights website. Include as much information on the destination as possible, and photos are a welcome.
