Peter Hannaford of DatacenterPeople to stress that people are the most critical component in the design, construction and operation of data centres.

London, United Kingdom: DatacenterPeople (<http://www.datacenterpeople.org/>), a leader in talent for the data centre industry has announced its CEO, Peter Hannaford is to lead a panel discussion on November 14th at DatacenterDynamics Converged London (<http://www.datacenterdynamics.com/conferences/2012/london-2012>). The panel is to discuss and address how to keep your data centre teams at peak performance including how to attract, retain and train talented data center staff as well as how to keep personnel operating at peak performance. Joining Mr Hannaford for the discussion are senior executives from DatacenterDynamics, Interxion, Cable & Wireless, Operational Intelligence Ltd. and Talent 4 Tech.

CEO, Peter Hannaford (<http://www.datacenterdynamics.com/node/25484>) said “Our Company brings 40 years of collective experience in helping organisations find and support the best people within their data centre environments and we’re delighted to be able to join this panel and share some of our key learnings. People are the critical component of any data centre business and exploiting best practise to help them grow and develop is one of the wisest business decisions any organisation can make”.

“Data centres have recently been described as an industry that wastes energy but there is a clear link between highly skilled and motivated staff and keeping facilities operating at high efficiency. Inexperienced and insufficiently educated staff also increases the risk of unplanned downtime. Both of these points highlight the vital importance of people in this business” said Mr Hannaford.

DatacenterPeople’s (<http://www.datacenterpeople.org/>) focused experience has enabled the company to assemble some specific and targeted insights that will benefit all industry participants. The Panel: Keeping your team at “Peak Performance” – how to acquire, retain and train talent will be held at DCD London on November 14th at 12:10pm in Hall 6.
