Version One appoints new Head of Product Development

Mark Palmer is key to Version One's growth strategy

19 November 2012 – Document management and imaging software company, Version One, announces that it has appointed Mark Palmer as its new Head of Product Development. Mark succeeds Martin Harbour who remains in the business in a new role, spearheading the product strategy.

Mark has over 20 years' experience delivering IT products and projects to market with recent roles including Director of Products and Marketing at document management company, Invu, and Senior Product Manager at Ceridian. Mark also worked as Head of Product Management at the Sage Accountants Division for over four years.

As Head of Product Development, Mark will be leading the research and development team at Version One, driving the products forward inline with he company's growth ambitions. Over the next 12 months, Mark will be focused on delivering a major Version One product suite upgrade to enhance the customer experience.

Mark will also be introducing new document management and imaging innovations to the UK market which will be driven by customer and partner feedback. These innovations will allow small to medium sized organisations to further automate their finance and human resource processes.

Mark Palmer says, "Version One's pedigree in the UK document management space together with its year-on-year growth strategy makes it an exciting time to be joining the company. I look forward to delivering the product enhancements and innovations necessary to support Version One's growth ambitions."

Greg Ford, Version One's Managing Director, says, "Mark has an impressive history of successfully delivering IT products and projects inline with the strategic needs of the business. His addition to the team will be key to driving Version One forward as the company enters a new and exciting phase."
