When thinking of ski accommodation, naturally you capture the image of pine chalets, rustic settings, a roaring log fire and natural highlights that place you directly within your settings. Add in touches of luxurious touches and the incorporation of the eco factor and what you are presented with is a fantastic example of high quality, sumptuous living accommodation when holidaying in some of the most beautifully natural skiing locations around the world.

Outdoor sports enthusiasts are often passionate about protecting the natural balance of the environment they enjoy so much and as a result will go to great lengths to ensure that accommodation they either buy, build or rent features as many renewable materials as possible; sourced locally to maintain a sustainable environment.

One couple who made the decision to create a winter chalet with innovative and quite bold 'Eco' input have done so in the most delightful and luxurious way, focusing on the environmental impact and sustainable use of local materials, many of which have been used in some form in the past. Chalet Sterwen is owned by Mark and Amy, a couple devoted to their outdoor sports and the natural balance of their environment.

Their vision was to create a warm, luxurious yet ecologically friendly chalet, incorporating all the luxurious mod cons that you could think of having such as under-floor heating, huge glazed windows, hot tubs and more, whilst keeping operating costs at a fraction of the cost as other properties reliant on more conventional means of heating and insulation.

ChaletFinder is a leading luxury ski accommodation and winter chalet specialist, featuring a wide selection of ski chalets for private hire on their website. Commenting on the design of Chalet Sterwen, Daniel Harrison, Sales and Marketing Director at ChaletFinder said, "Utilising an existing building, in this case an old unused barn was a terrific starting point for Mark and Amy, with thick stone walls as an effecting foundation to begin the build, the finished article just has to be admired, featuring wonderful, locally sourced timbers and beautiful, innovative features, this is one chalet that we would be happy to list within our luxury section at chaletfinder.co.uk."

He continued by saying, "Not only did Mark and Amy rescue a building that had been left to the will of nature, the use of sustainable materials and natural methods of heating and insulation simply make Chalet Sterwen a wonderful example of what can be achieved with imagination, flair and a healthy respect for the land and eco system around you."
