The online gaming specialists at Super Casino are anticipating the outcome of the European parliamentary vote on licensing and regulations within the industry.

The article, Banking Union and Online Gambling on the Agenda (<http://www.europeanvoice.com/article/imported/banking-union-and-online-gambling-on-the-agenda/78097.aspx>), published 5th September in Europeanvoice.com reveals that the plenary will vote on Tuesday 10th September in Strasbourg on a report compiled by Ashley Fox, a British member of the European Parliament. Originally the report suggested the EU-wide licensing of online operators; however this has since been changed to recommend the continuing regulation of online gambling by national authorities. It does however, encourage a higher level of co-operation between member states when it comes to consumer protection and money laundering. In particular these member states are being asked to interchange blacklists of operators as well as consider blocking access to illegal websites

As one of the most popular online casinos (<http://www.supercasino.com/>), Super Casino closely pursues industry developments. As such, the latest news was of great interest to the team. Dedicated to ensuring customer safety and security, a representative from the firm explains the importance of regulation within the online gambling sector.

“It’s good to see that firm plans are in place to protect customers from things like fraud and theft. By targeting blacklisted companies, these regulations will also benefit those online gambling sites that do operate legally and responsibly. At Supercasino.com we encourage responsible gaming and we also make use of the latest technology to ensure our transactions are theft proof.”

Super Casino looks forward to reviewing the outcome of the parliamentary vote on Tuesday.
