The online casino specialists at Supercasino.com have shared their thoughts following the news that the UK Gambling Commission is encouraging player input into its License Conditions and Codes of Practice.

The Commission recently announced the forthcoming publication of the framework for its consultative phase on the licensing conditions, creating opportunities for gambling operators and customers to submit their thoughts and suggestions. Interested parties have until the 14th December to make submissions to the improvements which include amendments to areas such as the way complaints and disputes are handled, information requirements, the protection of player deposits and co-operation with the Commission. There will also be a number of consultation meetings and workshops held from September until November.

The changes come following speculation that the remote gambling sector that the Commission regulates is likely to grow significantly in the near future.

Online casino company Super casino (<http://www.supercasino.com/>) have a strong commitment to the industry. Dedicated to pursuing the latest industry updates and developments, the team were pleased to hear of the opportunity for gambling customers, operators and bodies to share their input. A representative from the firm gives their views on the subject.

“It’s exciting that the UK Gambling Commission is presenting the public with such a wide opportunity to contribute to its policies. We will be interested to see the level of reaction this receives from gamblers and operators as well as the level of impact this has on the eventual changes.”
