The specialists behind Supercasino.com have shared their thoughts on the claims that online gambling may be legalised throughout the United States within the next ten years.

After years in the background, internet gambling is undergoing something of a transformation across the pond. States that have already taken up the activity include Nevada, Delaware, and most recently, New Jersey, with more expected to follow suit. Whittier Law School Professor, Nelson Rose, predicts that “within 10 years, I think we will see a very large portion of sites will have Internet gambling.”

Until fairly recently, the federal government ruled that online gambling was unlawful.

It comes at a time when experts estimate that legal US online gambling revenues will reach $670 million in 2014 (£416 million), increasing to $9.3 billion in 2020 (£5.8 billion). Interestingly, a study for the American Gaming Association revealed that despite existing bans, Americans spent $2.6 billion on online gambling last year.

Naturally the team take great interest in the progress of the industry, prompting a representative to reflect on the recent changes.

“As more US States introduce online gambling, naturally interest in the activity will increase, as will interest from investors. This mirrors the overall changes that the industry is going through. As understanding builds, reputation is improving, partly due to a higher emphasis on security and responsible gambling. By legalising internet gambling in the States, the government can also begin to regulate and monitor this better.”
