This means that approximately 164 million people will either place a bet, visit a mobile casino or purchase a lottery ticket on their device in 2018. The report highlights issues such as trends, challenges and opportunities within the sector, and reveals that the most significant growth is likely to be seen within the North American market. According to the report's author, Sian Rowlands, part of this growth can be attributed to the fact that dual-screen options on tablet casino games can enhance gameplay. She claims that "mobile can frequently provide a more immersive and convenient gambling experience than a desktop PC or laptop."

Renowned for providing high quality mobile roulette games (<http://www.supercasino.com/games/roulette>) across all mobile operators, Super Casino take a keen interest in all technological advances in the industry. A representative from the firm gives their thoughts on what could be driving the current trend.

"Naturally the number of mobile gamblers will increase in line with the amount of smartphone users. Alongside this, there is the attraction that in-play betting on a mobile device does not disrupt a user's experience when watching a live sports match for example. At Super Casino we go one step further to make mobile gambling as convenient as possible, offering users the ability to make deposits or withdrawals from within the application. Also, users who receive a phone call during a game can simply just resume this when the call has finished."
