The industry specialists at Super Casino (<http://www.supercasino.com/>) have congratulated volunteers who have trekked the Sahara Desert to raise funds for the Responsible Gambling Trust, the UK's leading problem gambling treatment charity.

A team of 21 people walked for 5 days, crossing 100 kilometres of dunes and open desert in the organisation's second annual fundraising expedition. Last year, volunteers raised over £70,000 by successfully climbing up Mount Kilimanjaro. Mark Etches, Chief Executive of the Responsible Gambling Trust, explains that the money raised from the Sahara trip will put in place the education and treatment services that minimise the harm of problem gambling. The Responsible Gambling Trust remains hopeful of achieving an overall fundraising target of £6 million in the current 2013/14 fundraising year.

Renowned for their serious attitude towards responsible gambling (<http://www.supercasino.com/enjoy-responsibly>), the team at Super Casino were pleased to hear of the recent efforts. As well as offering customers the option to set themselves daily, weekly or monthly limits, the company also provides players with the chance to self-exclude or play for fun with no money involved. A representative from Super Casino shares their thoughts on the subject.

"Naturally we want our players to have fun whilst gaming which is why we encourage responsible gambling at all times. Borrowing money to play, spending beyond your means or gambling with money set aside for other purposes is not recommended and can lead to significant problems for yourself or those around you. For those who recognise this behaviour in themselves, we provide details on gambling support groups through our website."
