Experts in overseas removals (<http://www.interdean.co.uk/moving-overseas/>), Interdean have commented on the news that New York has taken top spot in a study of cities that offer expats high quality working and living conditions.

According to an article posted by Ray Clancy on April 11, 2014, on the ExpatForum.com website, Savills, an international real estate adviser has carried out a report that classes cities based on their prominence, fame and economy. Mentioned in the report were such established cities as London, Tokyo, Singapore, and Paris, among emerging cities such as Moscow, Mumbai and Rio de Janeiro, which are often overlooked. But at the top of the list? The American mega metropolis of New York.

The Savills report is based on long term ideals such as the economic stability and sustainable attractiveness of a city. New York has measured up as one of the highest scorers in terms of living X factor, and whilst it rates in the top four of most expensive destinations to live, Savills has compared gross rental income to income available from 10 year government bonds in each country to give a true measure of the real estate performance, allowing you to compare it to local risk environment.

'It really is no surprise that New York has made it to the top of this report, what with its constant presence in films and music; it is a city that inspires those that live there and those that visit it. With such iconic architecture, colourful characters and a bubbling sense of promise at every turn, there is no doubt that New York has retained its crown as the capital of the world. That is why it makes the perfect destination for anyone aspiring for greatness – this is where great things are just waiting to happen around every corner.'
