Everyone knows that double glazing is great for cutting household bills. It helps to keep the warm air in, insulating your property much more effectively, while preventing draughts. There are also the added benefits of keeping the noise out, reducing condensation on the inside of your windows and a higher level of security to think about, which shows how useful double glazing can be for your home. But just how much money can you expect to save with the average double glazing instalment?

For the average three-bedroom, semi-detached house there are some significant savings to be had. With two panes of glass instead of one your home can keep in the heat in a much more productive way. The Energy Savings Trust estimates that you can save between £80 and £110 with B-rated glass. For A-rated glass the estimated savings go up to even higher levels, ranging between £90 and £120. With double glazing lasting around 20 years, that could mean a saving of between £1,600 and £2,400.

With the typical installation saving this much money, it's not hard to see why double glazing is proving so popular.

To make sure you're getting the most efficient double glazing DG Solutions follows the Window Energy Rating system. This is similar to appliance energy labels, with windows being rated between A+ for the best and G for the worst. Fortunately the latest building regulations require all new windows to be rated at least a C grade.

The cost of going up a rating could be up to 15% extra per window. Using the Window Energy Rating system you'll be able to estimate how much money you can save on your household energy bills were you to make the switch to double glazing. As it's such a cost effective way of reducing bills, and as it offers several other advantages such as more security and a quieter home, there's no wonder double glazing is being installed by more and more people each day.

For the installation of top quality double glazing that won't let you down, you need to get in touch with an experienced company which has helped give people top-end windows for years.
