The award-winning digital marketing agency are pleased to offer a new collection of free stock images (<http://www.absolutedigitalmedia.com/stock-images/>) to the public domain.

Understanding the difficulties that many webmasters face when it comes to finding high quality photos online, due to copyright issues and attribution requirements, the team at Absolute Digital Media decided to compile their own account of royalty free, stock images.

The images may be used as many times as desired, with permission to alter or manipulate as required. Consumers may use the images in printed or digital form, and for commercial or personal applications.

Attribution is not required, however is appreciated.

It comes following a busy year for the Essex-based company, who have recently been shortlisted for Best Small Agency at the European Search Awards. Rebranding at the start of 2014 to reflect the wider range of services offered, the team are pleased to add a free image service to the list. CEO, Ben Austin, shares his anticipation.

“We understand how frustrating it can be to find high quality photos online that don’t infringe copyright laws, yet it is so important to consider the visual impact of everything you do. That’s when we made the decision to offer our own stock of free images. We hope people will find this useful and we look forward to welcoming feedback.”

Whilst the current stock of images is concentrated on business focused scenarios, the team at Absolute Digital Media are planning to expand the collection over time.
