The reaction comes following the latest odds for the winner of Copa America 2015, which name Argentina as favourites to win the trophy for the first time since 1993. A spokesperson from Honest Betting Reviews gives their thoughts.

Argentina are the favourites to lift the Copa America trophy for the first time since 1993, as the bookies expect stars like Lionel Messi and Sergio Aguero to inspire their country to glory. You can find them at prices between 21/10 and 7/4 to win the tournament outright, which places them just above Brazil in the betting odds.

Argentina's quality up front could be the difference this year, with the likes of Messi, Aguero, Gonzalo Higuain and the recalled Carlos Tevez forming a lethal attack that has the potential for plenty of goals. Messi is also the favourite to be the top scorer at the tournament with some bookmakers offering odds of 7/2.

Elsewhere the bookies aren't expecting Messi to be too tired after his recent exploits in the Champions League, and you can find odds of 7/2 for him to be named top goalscorer after the tournament. Pushing him close will be Barcelona team mate Neymar, who seems to save his best for the yellow shirt of Brazil and you can find him with odds of 13/2.

Those looking for dark horses to back might be encouraged by the odds of Chile and Colombia, which you can find at 4/1 and 13/2 respectively. Chile are the hosts of the Copa America this year, and they have star names in their side including Arsenal's Alexis Sanchez and Juventus midfielder Arturo Vidal.

A spokesperson provided this statement: "The Copa America is always an entertaining tournament to watch, and with so many star names of world football involved there are sure to be more than a few goals for the fans to enjoy.

"These odds will entice a lot of people into placing a bet, but picking a winner is always so tough when you have such great teams competing. Everyone will always look at Argentina and Brazil for the Copa America, but the likes of Chile, Columbia and Uruguay can't just be counted out either."
