After successfully launching Pause Hydrate Creme on the website earlier this year luxury beauty and aromatherapy retailer Sulis & Thermae is proud to announce that they will now be the first UK luxury retailer to carry the full Phytomone range online.

Phytomone founder Jane Atherton, a clinical nutritionist, skincare therapist and menopause coach, developed the unique range with the support of a team of leading experts to combat the effects of hormonally changing skin. Speaking about the range Jane said, "It was one of those lightbulb moments. Due to my professional training, I knew what my skin needed but found it very difficult to find something that addressed all of my problems."

Sulis & Thermae director Jessica Bates said "Sulis & Thermae are committed to bringing the best products on the market to our consumers. The Phytomone range is no exception, it's a remarkable range and we're absolutely delighted to be the first luxury UK retailer to carry it".

Featuring ingredients created by Nobel Prize winning scientists, Phytomone is a truly innovative brand that has been meticulously crafted to combat the complex skin problems that are caused by the menopause. Some of the star ingredients include hyaluronic acid (known for tissue repair) argan stem cells, phytoestrogens (bio hormones) and rich proteins which provide skin with nourishment at a cellular level.

More About Menopausal Skin

The main cause of skin ageing during menopause is brought about by declining oestrogen levels, in some women this can begin as early as 35. Oestrogen is responsible for collagen proliferation and skin density, the production of oil in the sebaceous glands, skin cell turnover and regulating melanin. A lack of production of these hormones can cause skin changes such as loss of firmness and thinning of the skin. In the first five years after reaching menopause 30% of the skin's collagen is lost, with around 2% more every year after that.
