London March 15, 2017 -- Marco Secchi has expanded his combination photography/history walking tours to include not only Venice, but also Ljubljana (Slovenia), London and Budapest. Secchi's tours, which are sold via his website and his company, BetterPhotoWalks, make it easy to learn about a European capital city, while recording the experiences on film under the guidance of a seasoned travel photographer and photojournalist who makes his home in Europe. Says Secchi, "Our tours make it easy for travelers with an interest in photography to get the most out of their limited vacation time."

Secchi's photographic walking tours are offered on a regular basis. All of the tours set out early in the morning or late afternoon, so those on the tour are able to take advantage of the photography-friendly light. Participants have a choice of two, three or six-hour tours. During the photo walk, Secchi points out historic and architectural details that visitors might otherwise miss. One of the things that reviewers like best about Secchi's photo walk tours is that they get to venture beyond the typical tourist routes.

For those wanting a more intensive experience, Secchi offers half-day and full-day photographic workshops. Each workshop tour includes a visit to several sites in the morning as well as a coffee break and a mid-day stop to eat lunch, download images, charge batteries and get some rest. Secchi also offers tips and constructive critiques on participants' photos during the workshop tours. Tours are limited to four members to ensure plenty of personal attention. Reviewers on Trip Advisor also mention that Secchi is happy to share his suggestions for shopping, dining and evening entertainment.

Prices for Venice tours start at 210 Euros. London tours start at 400 pounds. Tours in Ljubljana and Budapest start at 210 Euros.
