Thornton and Lowe has released an innovative new software to help organisations manage their contract biddings more easily. The software is called the Tender Library 2.0 and promises to make writing tenders 30% more efficient, make bidding information easily accessible, provides bid continuity and regular improvements. This software has been made available on www.thorntonandlowe.com as of September 2018.

The Tender Library was first developed 6 years ago for the purpose of the companies own requirements. Starting originally as a search engine the company has since then invested time and money to produce the final software they have today.

"I'm so proud of how the Tender Library has developed. Tender Library is a system we developed back in 2012 to help our team of bid writers manage our information. We have since gone on to licence out the product to organisations large and small, public and private." Dave Thornton, Director.

They have provided the system to a wide range of clients including PLC's and NHS trusts even a variety of SME's. Making this bold move to a new era of the Tender Library the company has opened up the software to a much wider audience.

What does the software provide?

At its heart there is a powerful search engine and file management system. Helping find bid information easily and also all bid content and supporting documents are stored in an easily navigated system.

Built in bid/no bid system. Allows users to review success rate of bids in a consistent and efficient manner allowing teams to work together.

Bespoke task management system. This allows companies to structure bid related tasks, prioritising tasks and enhancing team interactions.

Preserving bid continuity. Bid information is easily accessible for staff old and new, creating a better flow and allowing all members of team to complete bids.

"Version 2 of the system is slicker, faster, and more adaptive for bespoke requirements. What's great is that you can buy it straight off the shelf or speak to our developers about how to embed it within your wider business systems. Tender Library is the start of our Bid Technology division, with other solutions in the 'pipeline'. " - Dave Thornton, Director.
