When our Party Leader, Robin Horsfall, took his role in May he promised the public that we would produce our manifesto in September.

Many political parties make promises to the public in the knowledge that they will never be fulfilled. The Veterans' and People's Party are different to other political parties, when we make a promise we deliver it.

We have listened to the people of Britain and looked at the areas of concern, we believe we have the opportunity to change the political landscape and the current issues facing us as a country.

With the launch of our manifesto today we are able to demonstrate that, not only are we a serious political party, we are an extremely viable option.

We fully acknowledge that these changes will not occur overnight nor will they be easy to make, however we are committed to giving the people of Britain an alternative to the current options of government.

Our goal is to bring back free thinking to the UK. To encourage people to question everything, to research topics rather than rely on social media photographs and falsehoods. To take responsibility for their own actions and the consequences of them.

We will urge people to question our own decisions, to root out any areas of concern or suggest areas of improvement. We aim to give the people direct access to government and to have their voices heard and their suggestions considered.
