- Highly experienced Microsoft Office 365 practitioners will give best practice tips on how to maximize Teams' collaboration capabilities, without risking loss of control over content
- The first 3 sessions feature a generic webinar for anyone deploying Teams, plus a Legal and Professional Services market-focused version

Belfast, November 20th , 2019 – Repstor (<http://www.repstor.com/>), the ECM software and matter management specialist, has today announced the launch of a Microsoft Teams™ Webinar Series designed to help organizations get the best from this powerful platform, without introducing new risk around content management.

In the first three webinars (full details below), experienced Microsoft Teams' practitioners, Fergus Wilson and Scott Brant will use Repstor technology and specific use cases to highlight the main risk factors if appropriate information governance policies and controls are not applied.

For each audience, Fergus and Scott will offer practical advice under 5 categories:

1. Governance/Team creation
2. Team naming conventions & Navigation
3. Content & Matter Management
4. Security & content sharing
5. Lifecycle management/Team classification

Announcing the timely webinar series, Fergus commented, "The soaring popularity of Microsoft Teams confirms the intuitive way people want to be able to collaborate today – on projects, ideas, problem-solving and decision-making. But without governance and control, Teams' use can create new chaos for information and IT managers. In these three sessions we will equip those in charge with practical tips to get the best from this powerful platform, without introducing new risk around content management."

The series kicks off on November 26th with a generic webinar targeting any company deploying Microsoft Teams and is followed by two sector specific webinars for Law Firms & In-house Legal Departments (December 3rd) and Professional Services (December 10th).

The 3 webinars are scheduled as follows:
