Chinese student Bo Wen Wang, 19, today secured his place at Cambridge University to study engineering; receiving 4 A's in his A-level examinations and a B in his A S level results.

Bo Wen Wang from Dalian, near the North-East Coast of China, took his A-levels in Maths, Further Maths, Chemistry, Economics and Physics at leading international study centre, Bellerbys College, based in Brighton, and believes the results have taken him one step closer to achieving his ultimate career goal of becoming an engineer.

Peter Corcut, Vice Principal and A-level Programme Manager at Study Group said: "Bo Wen Wang's results are impressive by anyone's standards, but to get these results in his second language demonstrate that Bo Wen Wang is an exceptional student."

Bo Wen was granted a Cambridge Commonwealth Trust Bursary from Cambridge University, to help him with his degree studies in engineering. With his high A-level results he has now been granted a place at Homerton College, Cambridge.

Bo Wen credits some of his success to the teachers at Bellerbys college and has formed a bond with one teacher in particular, Dr. Butcher, who this Further Maths tutor. "Dr. Butcher is an excellent teacher" Bo Wen claims, "He uses the latest interactive methods in his classes and always has a lot of time and patience. I respect him greatly due to his wisdom and intelligence."

When Bo Wen made the choice to study in Britain he decided that the best way in which to secure his place at a top university was to complete his A-levels here first, as he would be immersed in the English language and culture, ensuring a smooth transition between school and university.
