As a part of the Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) programme, Urbanist Architecture is providing their expertise to 30 charities in order to support them through designing and building their projects.

London's premier architects' firm has set up a competition known as "Architects Helping Charities" (<https://urbanistarchitecture.co.uk/architects-helping-charities/>), where charities can win up to £15,000 worth of free design, planning and strategic development advice.

Mr Ufuk Bahar, the Managing Director of Urbanist Architecture: Because we are always keen to donate our time, expertise and creativity to a worthy cause, we want to help charities bring their projects to life.

The firm understands that sometimes there are financial barriers which limit the growth of a charity; this is why they are inviting charities throughout the UK to pitch a project proposal which would directly benefit the charity and their members.

The key here is for charities to tap into the resources and expertise of London architects, finding creative solutions to their critical challenges. Urbanist Architecture is offering the top 30 entrants a chance to see their ideas come to life.

About: Urbanist Architecture (<https://urbanistarchitecture.co.uk/>) specialise in planning applications, architectural design and interior design, and work primarily on residential projects including renovations, extensions and new build homes.
